For those who are watching this 10 years+ later and don't understand: Microsoft announced prior to the release of the console that Xbox One games could not be easily shared with friends and family. There were a series of rules required to share games, such as having the person in your friend list for 30 days and each game could only be shared once. Also, internet connection was required at all times, even for single player games. The PlayStation, on the other hand, had no restrictions on gaming sharing and released this video mocking Microsoft's decision. After all the backslash, Microsoft backed out but we will remain with this masterpiece video for a really long time

Some context for those who didn't witness the '8th Generation Launch Massacre':

On May 2013 Microsoft presented the Xbox One with en enphasis on TV connectivity (hence the "TVTVTV" meme) and other media features aside from gaming, which was panned by fans. Plus, there were also rumors (later all proven true) that the console was weaker than the PS4, would need an Internet connection to work as a gaming machine and wouldn't accept used copies of games unless Microsoft, the publisher and some "selected partner" (e.g. Gamestop) accepted to make a used-game sellable. Oh, also the Kinect camera was mandatory. Fans hated all of this, and even after Microsoft reversed most of these they announced that the PS4 would accept used games, wouldn't need an Internet check to work and would be US$100 cheaper than the Xbox One ($399 vs $499, mostly because of the Kinect camera). Within that context they released this video.

After all of this, the pre-order ratio PS4 vs Xbox One was 2:1. This didn't change in these seven years. And thus, Sony won the 8th Generation of consoles.

People can rage all they want, but Microsoft deserved this. And for those of you fuming over their little jab at X-Box, you should be kissing Sony's backside instead for making Microsoft reverse course on used games. They didn't "listen to the consumer" as they like to claim. If you watch the little speeches they gave after the E3 conference they were still telling people to deal with it or get an X-Box 360. Sony completely forced their hand.

And here I am, editing this 12 years later.

WELL F US NOW, EH, SONY!? YOU WERE THE CHOOSEN ONE!

PS4 launch today in Europe, Latin America, Middle East, Asia(I think)...
PS4 launch in Japan early next year(one of the biggest market for Sony if not the biggest)....I think the XBox One is about to be raped in the ass for now on.

So Sony i would really think about what you do because if you sell only digital. Most gamer would not buy a ps6 anymore. 15% of your customer would not buy a console of you. So 15% of your digital buy fall down. Also Gamer that have digital and physical Games (both) will go and maybe 15 % will go. So -30% no offers/ -30% no buying console/ also some gamer would buy a new game of you if they could but they have no money if they cant sell their games. So not fast buying a Playstation Game anymore.

@bomberman4046 12 hours ago

The only reason i had at this point to continue buying console, playing just on pc, was the fact that i could buy some physical game and eventually be able to run them offline when everything would explode. If you remove that, why someone should buy a Playstation? The console costs more and more, there's a cartel on the price of the games that are insanely more price, for example on pc with steam, key store or trade, you have to pay them to maintain the PSN in order to play also online. Not only, they're forcing you on buying just on their online store, you have even to pay them to play. Insane. I Hope, really that the psn will be hacked again, and the hackers will also destroy every backup possible, and send bankrupt sony. That's what you deserve, go bankrupt.

Hey, 13 years after this video, are you really sure you're going to end physical game sales?

We are PlayStation players, and we can walk away from PlayStation if we have to.

Gaming without physical media means gaming with limits.

No second hand market going forward... deleting content, like movies, bought by consumers... Real nice, Sony! If a console is like this, where we own nothing and we're paying for a bad service, maybe is better to have a PC and play on Steam or Epic or GOG, there's also no second hand market, but we don't pay for online, games are a lot cheaper to buy, and we get to keep the stuff we buy!

Watching this in 2026 is almost art.

Turns out this was never some noble stand for ownership, used games or players. It was just a wonderfully smug way to kick Microsoft in the teeth while they were busy sprinting off a cliff.
And fair enough, it worked. I laughed too.

But now that Microsoft has basically removed itself as serious competition, Sony suddenly discovers that physical media is inconvenient, ownership is outdated, and players can kindly shut up and rent the future one licence at a time.
Funny how principles evaporate the second they are no longer useful as marketing. I have more than enough disposable income. I have spent absurd amounts of money on games, consoles and physical media for decades. But if this is really the road Sony wants to take, not one cent of mine goes to them again. Not for a PlayStation. Not for an amplifier. Not for anything with their logo on it.

“For the players”? Sure.
For as long as the players were useful.

Canceled PS+, removed all games from wishlist, and now I will ONLY buy discs for your platform. You will never get another penny out of me on your digital store front. I'm investing to build a PC right now. I will always hold closely the great times I had and will have, but this is the end for me. You lost somebody who has been with you since day 1.

I know it won't matter and this was inevitable, but what else can I do? You've messed this up and I'm at fault for thinking you wouldn't do it all in one slap to the face like this.

I hope that the next xbox will come with a disk drive and that it will be the PS3 era all over again. Playstation is way too confident to think that players won't boycott those anti-consummer policies. As far as I'm concerned they can shove the PS6 up they know where!
